MAGNEY-SNIVELY NATURAL AREA

The Magney-Snively Natural Area is comprised of almost 1,800 acres in west Duluth. The natural area is a highly functional, viable ecosystem consisting of a diverse mosaic of wetlands, uplands, and rock outcrop communities. These characteristics, as well as its large size, make Magney-Snively one of the highest ecological significance and quality to be found within an urban area.

UNIQUE FEATURES

Native Plant Communities
• Old growth northern hardwood forest, the largest sugar maple, basswood, and bluebead lily forest in the city and region
• Endangered white cedar and yellow birch community
• Bedrock shrublands, outcrops, and cliffs

Sensitive Species
• Eastern hemlock (Tsuga canadensis), a Minnesota endangered species with only about 50 mature trees city-wide

Natural Water Features
• Stewart Creek and the headwaters of Sargent Creek, both designated trout streams—each has a naturally producing brook trout population

Geological Landforms
• Rock formations that provide evidence of the geological formation of Duluth, including the basalts of Ely’s Peak and the layered series of the Duluth Complex
